The garments in this section are flame resistant. The information presented in this section should not be used as a substitute for reviewing OSHA or other regulations and recognized safety standards or be used in lieu of official safety training or certified on site analysis. The use of flame resistant garments will provide thermal protection when worn properly. The amount of protection is generally determined based on fabric weight and composition. Once an ignition source is removed, flame resistant garments will generally self-extinguish. The information regarding flame resistant garments provided herein is based on information from the fabric/garment manufacturers and Vestis™ makes no independent representations regarding these garments. Please check with the fabric manufacturer regarding specific certifications, if any, for each garment.

WARNING: These garments are not intended for fire entry or structural fire-fighting activities and provide no personal protection from chemical exposure. Remove garments at once if fouled with flammable material. It is the wearer's responsibility to determine if these garments are suitable for the intended use.

Please Note: The product copy in this catalog is in accordance with the new NFPA 2023 Edition. However, the garment labels on our current inventory may still display codes as "HRC" until that stock is depleted, including other brand name FR garments we provide.
